Adam is a tenacious advocate with experience assisting clients with a range of different disputes.

Adam articulated at a leading full-service litigation firm in Ottawa. He is a problem solver and is developing a diverse trial practice. His experience includes working with clients on a variety of different matters, including commercial disputes, class actions, intellectual property, private international law, entertainment law, and privacy law.

As lead researcher with the Samuelson-Glushko Centre for Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic (CIPPIC) from 2016-2018, Adam assisted counsel with oral and written submissions for six interventions at the Supreme Court of Canada, including: Google v Equustek, AstraZeneca v Apotex, Haaretz.com v Mitchell Goldhar, R v Jarvis, BC v Philip Morris, and Rogers v Voltage.

Adam is also active outside the office. He enjoys triathlon and motorsport, and trained with the University of Toronto's Varsity Track Team.

RECOGNITIONS

Adam has demonstrated success with oral and written advocacy. He was a member of two winning moot teams, including the 2017 Harold G. Fox IP Moot Competition, and the 2016 Nelligan O'Brien Payne Moot Competition, where he was also nominated for best factum.

Adam has co-authored articles on internet jurisdiction and intellectual property law. His contributions have been published in Harvard Business Review and Business Horizons.
